

NEWS RELEASE

WILLIAMSBURG, VA.--A small group of the Nation's most promising public servants gathered here today for the opening of a three-day orientation meeting preparatory to a year's graduate study in public policy and the management of public programs.

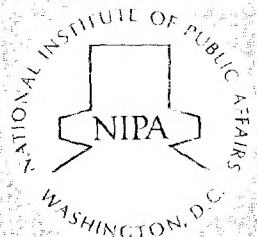

The 65 young men and women, recipients of Career Education Awards which are presented annually by the National Institute of Public Affairs, were chosen in national competition because of their exceptional ability, outstanding performance and high potential for future leadership in government. They represent 23 Federal agencies and the States of California, Colorado, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Wisconsin. (A list of Award winners is attached.)

Youth, ability, and a variety of professional backgrounds mark the group. Most of them are under 33 years of age. They average about eight years of civilian government service. Their professional fields range from law and economics to engineering and biology.

"These Awards are an investment in the Nation's future and democracy's success," said Carl F. Stover, President of N.I.P.A. "We ask our government to do many things in this complex and rapidly changing world. If they are to be done well, its leaders must be exceptional men, qualified for their weighty duties by high orders of intelligence, knowledge, skill, character, and dedication to the public good. These are the qualities the Awards recognize and the year of study will further cultivate."

The Awards, made under a Ford Foundation grant, permit winners to participate in special study programs at one of eight universities-- Cornell, Harvard, Indiana, Princeton, Stanford, University of Southern California, Virginia, and Washington.

Kenneth E. Boulding, author-economist, will open the Orientation Meeting with an address on "The Nation's Unfinished Business." One of the high points of the Orientation session will be a discussion in the round with a number of prominent figures. They include author-journalist, Max Lerner; Richard Cornuelle, Executive Vice-President, National Association of Manufacturers; author-historian, Peter Viereck, Professor of History, Mt. Holyoke College; and Guy Black of the Council of Economic Advisors. Morris K. Udall, U.S. Representative from Arizona, will close the session on Wednesday, speaking to the Award winners on "The Challenges of Public Service."

The National Institute of Public Affairs is a non-profit educational organization dedicated to improving the quality of public service and the ideas and information used in developing public policy.

Its Board of Trustees includes Charles B. Stauffacher, Continental Can Company (Chairman); Dr. Robert D. Calkins, The Brookings Institution; Robert K. Carr, Oberlin College; Rowland Egger, Princeton University;
